Dr. Steven L. Jordan, the president and CEO of Dr. J. Enterprises, an executive level problem solving company that delivers solutions to federal and state government entities and commercial clients across healthcare, logistics, IT, cybersecurity, and the list goes on, this week published his latest e-book on how to effectively coach employees.

Designed to help people, programs, and project managers understand the basics of how to effectively train and coach employees in any setting today, Workplace Coaching in a Changing Generation is made for beginners, seasoned coaches, and everyone in-between.

“Coaching employees can be a hard undertaking, even for the most advanced of leaders and managers,” said Dr. Jordan. “Sometimes, we all need some basic support and education to provide us with the tricks and tips we need to coach those on our teams into perfection. That’s what I had in mind when I wrote this book.”

Workplace Coaching in a Changing Generation provides a unique perspective on coaching during a changing generation that comes with new employee demands and requirements, while maintaining passion and excellence in everything that the reader does.

Topics covered in the e-book include: confrontational coaching, aspiring coaching, resilience coaching, and emerging life coaching.

Dr. J. Enterprises provides creative wellness coaching, business coaching, leadership coaching, executive business coaching, executive coaching, program coaching, emerging life coaching, and a variety of other coaching programs today. The company also engages in community involvement and partnering with civic organizations to help people and groups everywhere.
